GOOD NATURED PEOPLE. Are They es Interesting as Those of a Positive Disposition? As a general thing, original people, people with wills and opinions—in other words, interesting people—are not, I am inclined to believe, of a very easy-going temper. The man who has a mind of his own usually wishes to have his own way, and is therefore not likely to be regarded as in any coaspicuous degree pleasant. When it is said of a clergynant: 'Oin ha is a very good man," all church-going persons at once get an idea of very dry sermons. (For the conveylng of such compliment as this all the vowels and consonants togother are not equal to one loft-handed inflec-tion.) The most interesting character in Milton's Paradiso Lost is unquestionably the arch-fleud hiasseif; and in An Incident Which Proves That Their Icthe modern nowspaper—cplo poems boing long out of dato—no class of persons, unless it be political candidates, cut a groater figure than the criminals. There is no doubt of it, good nature and even a good character—which things, I comfort myself with hoping, are not exactly the sama -do tend to grow somewhat monetonous and thresome. Human nature is like an applo-all the more palatable for being a trifle tart. No husband and wife ever lived together in greater mutual uffection than did E la and her cousln Bridget, concerning whom we read, neverthe-"Wo agree pretty well in our tastes and habits-yet so as 'with a difference. The stoical Indifference of savages

When away with a recruiting party from the lator-sith Redcoat, on the San

Christoval coast, I was prosent at the parting on the beach of six natives, who had elected to go to Fiji to work for a term of three years on the plantations. But little regret was visible in the faces of those whose friends were leaving thom. Son parted with father, and brother with brother, with as little regret as if they were merely partlug for the hour. The mother or sister played no part in this scene, a characteristic nogative featuro of the social life of these antives. However, amongst the six natives was an elderly woman who was fellowing her bushind to Fiji, and her doparture was evidently keenly folt by a small knot of female companions on the beach. O to poor creature stood at the edge of the water, look

Washington, April 30.—Melville W. Fuller of Illionois was nominated for chief justice of the supreme court lo-day. He was born in Angusta, Msine, In Fobruary, 1833. He gradua-ted from Howdoln in 1851. He studical law with his unclu and commenced the practice of ins profession iu 185t at Augusta. From there he went to Chicago, where his worth was soon recognized and he was appointed to many honorable positions. In 1858 he married Calista O. Reynois, and after her decease, hiary Ellen Coelbaugh, who is mother of his eight daughters. He was ten-dered successively the solicitor-gen-eraiship, a position in the civil service i and the interstate con ission, and then a place on the Pacific Railroad commission. None of these places were acceptable to Mr. Fuller. Mr. Fuller presented the claims of Chicago to the National Democratic Committee at its recent meeting in this city for the honor of winter SULPHUR SPRINGS. entertaining the convention of this year. By this appointment the seventh judicial circuit, which has not been represented in the supreme bench sluce the late. ludge Davis resigned, again procures representation.

The appointment of Fulier as chief justice gives general satisfaction to all parties. He is considered a safe anivery talented man, abundantly equipped for the distinguished posiblon, though never active in political fights and wrangles.
